

The NTSA Training Report

A Primary Reference Source for Planning!

Dear Training Industry Executive:

In 2005, the National Training and Simulation Association (NTSA) commissioned a team of training experts drawn from its member companies to produce the NTSA Training 2012: Training and Simulation Requirements, Trends and Forecasts for the Decade Ahead.

The project team was divided into target groups to facilitate the broadest possible survey of the military services, joint and special forces training, Congress, Homeland Security Agencies, commercial, and research activities.

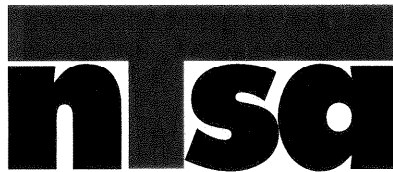

The team met with high-level officials and conducted face-to-face interviews and on-site evaluations to compile the most comprehensive assessment of future training needs.

The resulting NTSA Training 2012 is filled with valuable information that we are proud to make available to you.

This primary reference for business planning is a unique and comprehensive survey of the training and simulation market.

Reliable Information for Business Planning

This completely new report includes descriptions of the organizations which impact the budgets and procurement of the training and simulation industry. The information and data contained in this report is based on discussions with responsible officials regarding training requirements and associated planning as well as programming and budgeting data. In-depth interviews and detailed analyses were used to define technological advances in training and sought to identify major trends shaping the training requirements in the decade ahead.
